The Power of Learning

Young people may be surprised by where their learning and their interests can lead.

A 13-year-old loved playing with children. She often organized play groups on her neighborhood block, and she enjoyed home economics, human development, and art at school. When she turned 16 and wanted to work part time, her parents and her teachers encouraged her to apply to the city parks and recreation department.

As a parks and recreation coordinator, she found she could earn money and do what she enjoyed best: being and playing with kids.

The next summer, she learned clowning and traveled from park to park on her bike to entertain kids. The following year, she teamed up with two other creative high school students to design a puppet wagon for the parks and recreation department.

Soon other cities were interested in creating a puppet program like the one these three young women had developed. As first-year college students, they spoke to these communities and showed them how to get a program started.

These opportunities gave the youth chances to see how learning relates to every aspect of life and how it even affects career possibilities. In fact, one member of the group majored in child development in college, and opened a day-care center after she graduated. Another runs programs in an inner-city YMCA. A third enjoyed writing scripts so much, she became a writer.

time together

Three ways to help your child stay interested in school:

1. Ask what other learning options are available at school. Are there special classes, programs, or minicourses to take?
2. Your child may show interest in certain subjects. Find one that sparks her or his curiosity and build on that.
3. Involve your child in hobbies and interests that you enjoy.
